The focus with me is on the needs of a baby, toddler and toddler and how you as a parent can better attune to them.

As a child we are often taught all kinds of control patterns. We unconsciously pass on these learned patterns to our children. In a loving way I inform and confront parents with the help of tools about their own unconscious patterns and emotions. This gives parents the opportunity to voluntarily break through these control patterns. So, it is a choice for awareness. I have studied open communication and learning to listen empathetically to parents and their children. I have consciously chosen to remain sensitive, vulnerable and open and therefore my life is my greatest teacher.

I have been able to assist more than 1100 babies, toddlers and preschoolers in the first maternity week of their lives as a maternity nurse at home.

There are many misconceptions about crying. By learning to look at crying differently, parents and caregivers naturally feel and experience what their child wants to say.

This allows the child to empty his hard disk.

My book: Ik ben er...War nu? Wat baby's weten en wij niet

I'm here... Now what?

What babies know that we don't provides a detailed picture of the language spoken by a young child. The parent lovingly tunes in to their child in a safe environment and situation.

As a result, parents react differently to crying. They know from experience what the enormous positive effects are and that makes them extremely motivated. A strong bond of love develops with the child.

They have learned to mirror their child's behavior to themselves. The self-healing ability of the child goes full on and promotes the development of the child.

Practical example

Dear Conny

Here's another positive story about crying Conny!

It remains amazing what it has done to my 8 week old daughter.

Sometimes I just let her tell the story by crying.

And that relieves her so much, I notice. She is calmer and happier. She was very sullen before you came! But after your visit, she started looking more and more open and cheerful. She calmed down and started laughing a lot the next day. Now she smiles almost constantly when she is awake... What a difference. It seems that she also allows more in her development! Suddenly laughing more and already making ah and oh noises. Just suddenly so fast! I also noticed last week that after changing her skin has become much softer than before, The stress is gone!
